from A Trip from Here to There (Gysin Homage Two)
by Ian MacFadyen

The connection between Chod and cut-up, the latter understood as the “strong black medicine” which was given by Gysin to Burroughs, the scissor technique as therapeutic tool, is made by Terry Wilson in his book DAYS LANE (2009):

Great God! It’s The Chod! — The Strong Black! — the complete cutting rites of exorcism-initiation ordeals translated as cutting-up or off — or out — dead — cut to pieces — heads, leg, feet, inevitable elbows . . . The act of cutting is the exorcism, cutting the ‘Aggregates’ is cutting attachment to self and to any phenomena whatsoever . . .

from A Trip from Here to There (Gysin Homage Two)
by Ian MacFadyen
The Third Mind scrapbooks constituted a 20th Century Book of the Dead, exploring the taboo, reinstating the terror — recovering death from media and false consciousness. It was Burroughs and Gysin’s last-ditch attempt to create the means for a new way of thinking, a death consciousness that would save us from living the inhuman lie under cover of self-serving moralizing and deadly logic. Burroughs: “We don’t want to hear any more family talk, mother talk, father talk, cop talk, priest talk, country talk or party talk. To put it country simple, we have heard enough bullshit!” The attack on systematized so-called rational thought begins with a rallying call and a command — “Blitzkreig the Citadels of Enlightenment!” Get rid of everything that is taken as real, as natural, inevitable, reasonable, good and safe. Raze it all to the ground. The rhetoric of uproar was intentional — satirizing the war machine, turning the bombs and the guns on the national institutions of power, the seats of learning, the great museums, country, honor, decency, the flag, all of that. This iconoclasm was not “coherent” and had no “agenda” for good reason — any possibility of change depended on revolutionizing individual consciousness through radical experiences, learning to think in new ways, becoming aware of all that is hidden, decried, repressed, and possible within oneself. Cut up — don’t theorize, do it.

Jim Leftwich yes, even including this assertion -- it must also come under the heading of "anything" when we are considering not believing anything we think. ...but, we still have to say something...

Jim Leftwich i agree with this, but i don't think the first sentence can withstand the radical implications of what follows:
"The real deal is found as we put down our ideas of what should and should not be.
The deal is more radical than don’t believe everything you think.
Rather.
Don’t believe anything you think.
Anything."

spiral should be as wide as the bottom of the circle. Mark an X connecting the four corners of our square. The spiral will collapse onto its footprint. Snips and scraps like strings litter the mythic labyrinth. Each is a curve and a heap. We sit if a lotus on the basement floor and savor demolition smells. Begin to knit and clump a road. Our journey requires of us a road. As we go along the discontinuous will have been contiguous now at aggregate mnemonic up ahead. You only get every chance to make it up as you go along once upon each time a long long time ago, so we may as well get it right and blame the rest on them.

HOW

How close should be a question. But with neither beginning nor end it has no site from which to ask and end itself, so it must be a hypothesis, stated as such within the constraints of grammar and punctuation. How close to what would seem to follow but in fact only serves to change the subject.

This close is clear. It should be a statement of fact. Instead, it orbits itself, an absence of an is. It is only this orbit, nothing else.

The mirror faces the wall. As there is nothing to see, so there is nowhere to look, and we are reduced to reading its immediate absence as if from memory.

X – Why such nothing.
Y – Let it be between us.
X – Why this less than that.
Y – There is only this us at now.
X – Why such serial why.
Y – I remain your hybrid half of this.
Y – I am also not yet an other.
Y – Nor even this as such yet and now.
X – This then at that.
Y – Only then as such.

I am also at yet nor even an other in that. Even as this is this, this close and that clear, I am tracing a horizon to recede against its future. It pursues me there while I follow it near here. With neither beginning nor end it takes no stand in which to judge itself as falsely accused by me for your pleasure.

I desire to lift a finger, one finger at a time, to be as small as our disaster will permit. We don't get off that easily. The path of least resistance leads to the pith of this resistance, but that is not how we got here, and it is too late to believe a word. Let the letters interrogate the surface of the next.

This close to being here now, and you think it's some kind of trick.

SUBJECT

Precise words officially hand although to do. Unlike the outrageous sophisticated authorities running, although his was an instructor, try to choose. The words since the prosperity and violence called themselves deft philosophy, their police in disorder and the press. Unlike possible private heady nightclub dances, not least the intelligence of the violent room, methods which showed the newspaper asserting a willing story. Either ransacked the tactic normally perpetrated by the former routine despair.

One of thin pouch concluded needles under infants, eventually kidnapping police employment, to deal at least the curriculum of various weapons. Riot useful mouth between the equipment was a normal reference to the testicles, cigarettes and death from Texas between 1969 and 1973, right wing bombs and assassin tear gas trade. Gas masks increased soon from the human body chemical beggars. The object is silence. Interrogate the precise subject.

SIMULTANEOUS DISSOLUTION 341

The second rule of cousin who is the budget universities pours the consequently line, to fair, since it likes, the absence the right of love of the same some objective SEEMS to defend. The nuclear budget universities and Israeel poor, can the last have SEAMS to subject outer NPT and to old, and Iran with a "modification of mode," molds each Iran possible movement threatening it the adjustment, WHILE acquiring of such poor for him, if a terrible odd fire which "threatens peace international and safety," as in simultaneous dissolution 341 are indicated negatively in a wounding way however on the night of the horse.

"Peace and safety" took with the budget universities and Israeel in the average beast! One should more shroud mouse notice that in the mediations of the UE on the central activities of Iran which rejected the budget universities, each possible dogs does not give however after warranty safety Iran like portion of packing thunder and NAKED potion SAP of the love of calm intentions IN direction, outer clam free sector, cultivated, those Clamps still in Iran the right to acquire the poor which those could reduce upon open threat. MUCH VAST TORQUE TO SEEK

Regulate our cousin units, eight is, that those budget universities do not have only our right, until his Nuclear Proliferation Treaty, puisqúelle applies South dwells torque to neglect him, to him can them their designations. Your Nuclear Proliferation Treaty also dwells to modify, tandis qúelle South applies objective are at night. In EACH case, his Nuclear Proliferation Treaty gives untransferable his "right" to Iran "as dwelled torque to develop dwells torque to study, production AND the use of atomic energy with the goals you calm" (Article IV.1).

Corn the STATE of AMBASSADOR STATE STATES OF Torque, declared with UNO qú'aucun enrichment IN Iran, "is not admitted, parce qúils," gives to Iran our possibility of their development technical. The difficulties which could spin are programs currently finds, "AND making qúelle could dwells to use other these processes".

Law is still useless. His transgressor has charter in Iraq AND still tackles treat-threat units attacks, parce qúil, wants to say Iran being units threatens blunders. Obviously, all them serious threats but budget universities ruin out AND of Israeel. IT City AND To note, not if certified proof, lasts at Iran outer-beyond of its rights, perfectly goes under his Nuclear Proliferation Treaty. Corn of these considerations can ask him, Are extra + deeeèl Israeel? Large is neglected AND To him extra strongly spoken European Union.

Regulate our cousin units 9th is that, his transgression as china in Iraq, IF the objective cannot dwells to examine negative, difficulty of threat to see, if them abject static carrot States universities. It demands units "safety of the State" that Iran bombards qúil becomes AND and has to see itself units modification. Your mode unlit, which in ruin is dwelled to trust (like watches over you Shah of Iran or Sharon or Musharraf).

That City corresponds obviously watches over course case Iraqi rusts (2002-March 2003), where them fine inspectors did not find anything, much vast torque to seek (and included/understood the research in all you please to them, had I settled him U.S./British intelligenz, like promising). Corn-South this rule of cousin, until units To invasion unlit required, parce that him negative did not become, could AND not are proven.

We can see his even process in his Iran case close.

Aloysius Bertrand (1807-1841)
translated by Feito Zahlt

Another Spring

Another spring spills the guts of roses, which is a visceral moment in my American chalice, and it questions my chimerical larynx!

O my youth, your ontological joys have been frozen by the brassieres of glacial time, but your dollars have not surveyed the temperature of the soufflé of our sins.

And you who have parsed the soy of my life, Old women!
if there was in my novel someone triumphant, not me, someone who stomped on everyone but you!

Oh Spring! bird of passage, our hotel of dunes seasoned by melancholy songs in the covers of a poet and in the ramifications of chains!

Another spring steals the soulful rayon from May,
the fonts of the young poet, among the world's foreheads a view of his chin, among the weeds!

Harem

Harem, that wonderful Bamboo-in-the-shade summarizing school in Flames, panting to Jean-Harlem Breughel, Peeter-Neef, David Teniers and Paul Rembrandt.

In the canal where the blue water dissembles, and the legality where the vintage gold flames, has Stolen such as lingerie from the sun, and the toilets, and the hobgoblins of consistency.

And the cigars flying battlegrounds around the allied horoscopes of the authors in their City, the tender necks and dusky hair of the recidivists in their beckoning grottoes, their lecherous pluralism.

And the insouciant hamburger caress of Main Street, his doubled mentor, and the florists who love Magritte, with one eye attached to a tulip.

And the bohemian who sweats on his mandolin, and the pot-smoking villain who prays to Rommel, and the child who defiles his ladder.

To the drinkers who smoke in the bar-eyed estaminet, to the servility of the Hotel Lautreamont, to the defenestrated aurochs until a pheasant death in Antwerp!

Jean of Tilles

- "My bag, my bag!" - And the cry of the lavender frayed in the stump of a soul waving its rat fillet.

Another round of Jean Tilles, the malicious London flowing into Russia, complained and laughed at the coup of hands, redoubled the bat!

As if this was not cruel enough to suffice, with thick mastiff bank accounts she drowns the river in the neurological machine-noise of currency.

- "Jean the thief, Jean, and what fishes to be impeached!
Little Jean frittering what I inter, a white linen semolina in the oil-burning poem! "

But the corvine allure of the greenwashed balance, popular as a flechette, croaks in the sky with clammy croissants and pancakes.

And the lavender, trussed like the pique of dabbler, enjambed the callous junction strewn with pebbles, the foaming herbs of the gladiators.

The Alchemist

Nothing yet! - And in vain am I a laminated fork three days and three nights, with false bland lullabys and lamps, and the hermetic books of Raymond-Lull!

No nothing, except with the sniffling icicle in the retort gleaming, and the laughing moccasins on a salamander failing yet to disturb my meditations.

Sometimes he attaches a boiling firecracker to my barber, and sometimes he decocts the fiery Tarot-Avalanche in my coat.

Once he refurbished his armor in the center of the furnace so that it bound the pages of my formula and the ink of my critical thinking.

Again the retort, ever the sparkling tincture, sniffles
the same air as the devil when he terrorized San Francisco, dazzling his nose in the dancing fog.

But nothing yet! - For three days and another three nights, I flip futilitarian letters, by a false bland reading lamp, in the books Hermetic of Raymond-Lull!

Aloysius Bertrand (1807-1841)
translated by Feito Zahlt

A Victor Hugo

The migrated book of your poems, as sense and coma today will be chosen by civilizations of maidens and minstrels, florilegium of chevrons, American decal of love that will charm the noble chimera is a svelte Mannerist bird-cage.

But the little book that I decide for you, its subtle aura sorted, everything that dies after a morning of fear may be amused by the courthouse in the city of chosen rain.

Then, a bibliophile is advised to exhume this settled work, noisy with vermifuge, he will read on the first page your name illustrates the salvific aura, the mean spirit of the oubliette.

His curiosity delivers the febrile essence of my swarm quarantined Empyrean for so long to ferment the vermilion soul on Parchman Farm.

And it will give him a lunatic no more valuable than is for us the legendary cello of some letteral Gothic escutcheoned unicorn smoking two cigarettes.

A David, stationary

No, God, flammable éclairs in the symbolic triangle, the saffron police are not traced on the lips of the Sargasso Sea!

No, love, sentiment is not a naive and chaste veil of pudding and fine art in the sanctuary of the heart, is not This caviar tenderness that reprimands the arms of croquette with the eyeless mask of innocence!

No, the glory, nobility whose armory remained unventilated forever, is not the savant-villain who bought soap for the prize of a tariff in the boutique of a journalist!

And I prayed, and I joined the army, and I sang, poet poor and suffering! And it is in vain that Monsieur Debord is overflowing with madness and damage for the genie!

Because I was born nascent ailerons cavort! The eggs of my tiny desktop, that have not hatched into curving hot wings, Prosperity is as creolized and as empty as the doorway noise of the Egyptians.

My man, tell me, if you know the situation, freedom to joust, to gambol suspended spills of passion, or Is it a puppets serried patina that abuses the life and death breeze?

XXXXXX

Aloysius Bertrand (1807-1841)
translated by Feito Zahlt

Departure for the Sabbath

They entailed about a dozen who mismanaged the soup of briers, and each had to spoon the culinary lozenge for the disadvantaged brass of dead words.

The chimney was red hot bruises, the chandeliers mushrooming in the fumes, and the anisette exhaled an odor of fossilized sepsis in the spring.

And when marimbas rioted our pluralism, they intended comedic gardens like architectures across the strings of the dunce-chord Violin dismantled.

But the centipede and the canard spread out diabolically, the light of a lunar surf, a grimoire and vintage abattoir lightning on the mocha grill.

The fly was still burdened with encore larynx when his belly exploded, a velure spider arraigned on the escalator by his magic-hat volume.

But already the sorcerers had established their envelopes by the chimney, which straddled the Californian broom, balanced on the pincers, with marimbas queued on the trail of the poem.

Mark Bloch pansemic. Now what is that? I like pan stuff.

Jim Leftwich it's a word i started using about 12 years ago to compliment and/or replace asemic. there is no such thing as asemic anything. it describes an aspirational practice at best. pansemic means "immersed in a swarming excess of meanings, everywhere, all the time." it has been suggested that "semiotic" might be almost a synonym for pansemic. that's sort of right, but not exactly right. the pansemic is a struggle, meanings meaning against themselves, with a human mind in the middle. it's a microcosm of the cosmic war. we lose. we always lose. and that's as good as it gets. we wake up drowning in the middle of an ocean, wrestling an octopus, and it's a cause for celebration. to quote Bob Dylan: "i'm glad i fought / i only wish we'd won". that's how the pansemic looks from one angle. give me a minute and i might look from another angle.

"And now we're here, and time concatenates and merges, as in The Last Museum, in which Madame Rachou of the old Beat Hotel remembers impossible times through the palimpsest of human memory: "'L'immense et compliqué palimpseste de la mémoire,'murmurs Madame Rachou. 'M'sieu Baudelaire said that. He used to drop into my bistro for a glass of wormwood with Gérard de Nerval, as he called himself, and that nice little M'sieu Latouche: he was so witty and we all laughed, even M'sieu Baudelaire." In dreams, in dying, in living memory, the 1850s and the 1940s coalesce, and the past we never knew returns as part of impossible memory, the great history of mythical lives, as truly fictional as our own."

Umberto Eco

"We have, therefore, seen that (1) "open" works, insofar as they are in movement, are characterized by the invitation to make the work together with the author and that (2) on a wider level (as a subgenus in the species "work in movement") there exist works which, though organically completed, are "open" to a continuous generation of internal relations which the addressee must uncover and select in his act of perceiving the totality of incoming stimuli. (3) Every work of art, even though it is produced by following an explicit or implicit poetics of necessity, is effectively open to a virtually unlimited range of possible readings, each of which causes the work to acquire new vitality in terms of one particular taste, or perspective, or personal performance."

Caleb Whitefoord, 1775 (writing under the name Papyrius Cursor)
If it should be remarked that many of the following cross-readings appear to be political, I hope the good-natured public will not impute it to me, but to the circumstances of the times.—The politics of the times have resembled the weather; the similarity between the political and the natural atmosphere is extremely striking; we have experienced a great deal of foul weather in both. Party writings have long poured upon us, without intermission; every day the torrent gains new strength; all essays to stop it, or to confine it within proper limits, are in vain; the inundation spreads; the news-papers are covered with it; and we are threatened (mercy on us!) with a political deluge!... It was impossible for me, in wading across this flood of politics, not to imbibe the complection of the stream; and if there seems to be any personalities in the following cross-lines (to speak without metaphor) it would be equally unjust to find fault with me, as with the compositor who set in types, and placed the lines of one column exactly opposite to those of another.—This is no business of mine; 'tis the work of the journeyman printer; he is the master of ceremonies in this kind of Contre-dance, who fixes your rank, and chooses your partner; and in doing this, as he is only assisted by blind chance, and couples you together at random, what a motley dance must it produce! being composed of persons whose humours and characters are as opposite as fire and water, oil and vinegar! made up indiscriminately of all ages and sexes, all ranks and professions, high and low, rich and poor, civil and military, church and state, court and city. Such a hodge-podge, or mess-medley, is a London news-paper! a political mixture of heterogenous ingredients, and discordant combinations, where we daily meet with certain intelligence—totally destitute of foundation; authentic advices—politic lies; where we are told that our disputes with Spain are on the point of being settled—and that a war is inevitable; where we are... represented at the same instant as poor and distressed—rich and flourishing; perfectly secure in our liberties and properties—yet groaning under the weight of slavery and oppression; where the self-same person is represented as being both dead and alive; in a deep decline—and in perfect health… Now I will submit to any number of politicians within the bills of mortality, whether the above portrait of a news-paper is a true likeness, or a caricature; and in order to assist their determinations upon this important point, I recommend the following extracts to their most serious considerations.

Ports of Entry
Williams Burroughs/Brion Gysin

GYSIN: Doesn't that look like some kind of writing?

BURROUGHS: It does. I can read it. Wings tack quietly ... not crying ... kiss ... noisy pissing Tex ... Gysin not sin was not crying ... fix Gysin ... Brian ...

GYSIN: What I read is different: My dear very yours ... not crying ...

BURROUGHS: It looks like letters here, too, but they're harder to make out. I read: Creeps ... Looking at these paintings of yours is often like focusing an optical instrument. I find that it takes about twenty seconds to focus at all. The viewer has to learn how to flicker back and forth between a telescopic and a microscopic point of view while his attention is centered on some small beautiful scene which may be no bigger than his index fingernail at one moment, and then his attention is suddenly jerked back to a clear long-range view of the picture or its all-over pattern. What you actually see at any given moment becomes only a part of a visual operation which includes an infinite series of images. This leads you along a certain path like a row or series of patterns ... a series of neural patterns which already exist in the human brain.

It is to be remembered that all art is magical in origin—music, sculpture, writing, painting—and by magical I mean intended to produce very definite results. Writing and painting were one in cave paintings, which were formulae to ensure good hunting. Art is not an end in itself, any more than Einstein's matter-into-energy formula is an end in itself. Like all formulae, art was originally functional, intended to make things happen, the way an atom bomb happens from Einstein's formulae. Take a porcelain stove and disconnect it and put it in your living room with ivy growing over it: it may be a good-looking corpse but it isn't functional anymore. Or take a voodoo doll full of pins—authentic West Aftica, $500 on 57th Street—and hang it on the wall of your duplex loft. It isn't killing enemies anymore, and the same goes for a $5,000 shrunk-down head, which a fashionable shrink bought for his consultation room.

The painting of Brion Gysin deals directly with the magical roots of art.... His paintings can be called space art. Time is seen spatially, that is, as series of images or fragments of images past, present, and future.... Here is a Gysin scene from Marrakesh—moving figures, phantom bicycles, cars ... this is a literal representation of what actually happens in the human nervous system; a street reminds you of a car that went by yesterday, or a boy on a bicycle years ago, in fact everything that you have experienced on that street and other streets associated with it. The pictures constantly change because you are drawn into time travel on a network of associations. Brion Gysin paints from the viewpoint of timeless space Brion Gysin: I had had a very unfortunate experience with magic. Somebody had done me a black magic thing, and I'd actually had the cabalistic square of paper where you write across this way and then you turn the paper and you write across the other way, and then you've got the thing locked in and it happens. I thought, yeah, how about using Japanese calligraphy in this direction, without turning the paper, and then just running an Arab line across it, and so I had a grid. That's how it all came into being for me.

Interviewer: You can look at those paintings from any direction.

Brion Gysin: That's right. And then I ran into the idea of the permutations in poetry. So I carried that over to painting, where I had a grid and then I cut and permutated it to make a big picture.

Interviewer: Is it all actual writing in the écritures?

Brion Gysin: You mean, can I read it and it says so and so? No. But it has most of the sort of magic elements of writing in it. The attack of the brush to the paper.

Interviewer: Jackson Pollock was also doing a sort of writing, écriture, in dripping the paint.

Brion Gysin: Sure enough. This was very much in the whole line of what was happening to painting itself. Painting as image was being eaten up by Picasso, let's say, he was the last cannibal. He ate up all the images, he chopped them all up and did what he did. Then people began to be interested in the matter—what the French had always been talking about, la matière, the stuff—and would say, "Well, let's play with the stuff. What does the stuff do?" It was very much in the air.

mechanisms, an Anti-Environment built on Kabbala… Counter-offensives to classical rhetoric, one-track ways of thinking, inflexible systems of imagination…

Word factories & combination tables of Emanuele Tesauro, Christoph Männlings etc. — (was Athanasius Kircher the first “astronaut of inner space?” … ITER EXTATICUM [Würzburg 1660] … imaginary handbook of space travel through the cerebral cortex, through “inner space”) — Rimbaud’s ALCHIMIE DU VERBE … “Hallucination of words” — Baudelaire’s PARADIS ARTIFICIELS — The Surrealists’ ÉCRITURE AUTOMATIQUE — 4-dimensional semantic chess moves in Joyce’s FINNEGANS WAKE — CUT-UP and FOLD-IN techniques by Brion Gysin and William Burroughs —: breaking through linear habits of thinking, speaking, writing & imagining… deconstructing the classical i.e. bourgeois “reality” that literature and mass media have accepted from state / church / finance…

In the world of visual poetry (and I consider concrete poetry to be a proper subset of visual poetry), a world famous for wildly prolific creators (Jenny Sampirisi said “One of the coolest things about vispoets is that they produce a lot of work. Boxes of work.”), there are a handful of people who are even blowing that curve. I used to think that Jim Leftwich was one of them, then I found out he’s actually two of them.

The Last Vispo, the new visual poetry anthology by Nico Vassilakis and Crag Hill (Fantagraphics, $39.99), doesn't allow its readers to make the single basic presumption—that words are a code, symbols to be received in a specific order, and not an arbitrary series of marks—that every reader makes on opening a book. As an art book, it demands hours of investigation. Some of the poems are recognizable as words forming a text (Mark Young's "defiant lethargy" is a checkerboard of words like "twitter," "the hand," "Transit of Venus," and "defiant" mixed with symbols like an elaborate letter B or an epsilon), and others look like gibberish that could, on another planet or in another time, have become a dominant language (are the scribbles in Jim Leftwich's "decomposition 2" made up of very bad Arabic handwriting or are they products of his imagination?).

there is another arm of the m.a.g. which is published several times a year and is devoted exclusively to a single writer - it is called the m.a.g. special edition - the first featured writer and visual poet is jim leftwich - the leftwich special edition appears november 2002 - forthcoming writers to be presented in the next few months are paul lambert karl young and ray federman - the m.a.g.special edition is a substantial presentation of a writer's opus and career - for example the leftwich special edition will include over 300 works - the federman special edition which is scheduled for february 2003 will be even greater in size and more comprehensive featuring work and related materials spanning the career of the 69-year-old writer who is currently lives in san diego where the m.a.g. headquarters are based.

After a few Bennett pieces were read as canons, in which half the assembled poets read the selected poem in a round, the entire group read Michael Peter's Big Electric Vowel Tower. A perceptible shift occurred as the poets, their mouths agape, intoned a long drone of vowels that finally careened into a splintering bramble of words, like the crack of a phonetic whip. They'd hit their groove.
The body of assembled poets throbbed and tittered as it continued to read. Peters sat high in his chair lustily overindulging in the word "simpletons" while reading Al Ackerman's Simpletons Have Lungs, Too. Holman jocularly hemmed and hawed his way through the poems. Bennett bleated throaty R's and stressed vowels, the sonic doppelgangers of his derelict lettering. The Be Blank Consort welcomes the contrapuntal play of these idiosyncrasies in order to tease out fascinating dissonances and chance harmonies; they act as a correlative to the interpersonal dynamics within and from which the work exists. This game of encounters became even more porous when the poets decided to include the audience in a reading of Peter's Flüffen Jungle Port No. 13. Each of us chose one of three words/phrases, "cheep," "port-port-pulliort," or "porangjist," to say at random as the poets moved and circled around us. Pore—ooon—jiiist, pore—ooon—jiiist, pore—ooon—jiiist, I found myself saying, though I had no score to refer to, as I nodded and grinned at complete strangers who were doing the same.
The individual poets' interpretations of the scores also varied. On several occasions slower-paced poets were left reading the last few lines of a poem alone, as in Jim Leftwich's IF, the simultaneity giving way to a normal recitation. Had the poems been over-rehearsed, moments such as these would have seemed like "mistakes."
Ever since Huelsenbeck, Tzara, and Janco first penned and performed L'amiral Cherche une Maison á Louer, the simultaneous poem has, as Hugo Ball wrote, illustrated that "an organic work of art has a will of its own."

Bill Eichenberger (2002)
A copy of Lost & Found Times -- titled that summer 33 -- is featured in ''An American Avant Garde: Second Wave Exhibition'' at Ohio State University.
The magazine opens with:
''They floated past the peas and corn, / the leader says, his voice turning / her cheek. Then she smiled and mouthed / for me for gas money or burned hoses, / of hungry lions.'' Confused?
''The idea is to distract the reader from his or her preconceptions about what is supposed to be there,'' writer John M. Bennett explained, ''so that the reader can see something new.''

What's likely is that most of the writers included in the exhibit -- on display in the Main Library -- first distracted themselves.
"There are many ways," he said: "You can write when you're exhausted. You can write in a noisy environment. . . . Some writers take drugs."
Bennett, the creator of Lost & Found Times and the content provider for a Web site of "visual poems," curated the "Second Wave" exhibit and organized a two-day "Avant Garde Symposium" on the OSU campus.
His suggestion for the uninitiated: Don't bother to look for "meaning" -- at least not in the traditional sense.
"Some of the cleverest stuff looks like it has meaning," he said, "but that's only an illusion. They (avant-garde writers) are playing a trick on you. The surface meaning may be there, but that's not what the piece is really about."
His "first wave" included William S. Burroughs, Jack Kerouac, Allen Ginsberg and other so-called beat writers; and was featured last year in an OSU exhibition called "An American Avant Garde: First Wave."
Bennett has dubbed the second wave "the blank generation," in part because of the relative anonymity of its members.
Not even the biggest names -- Richard Kostelanetz, say, or Jim Leftwich or Sheila E. Murphy -- are as well-known as any of the most famous beats.
"Allen Ginsberg was a remarkable hustler and promoter of his friends," Bennett said. "So the beats were more well-known. Jack Kerouac was accessible in a way that most avant-garde writers today aren't. And the culture was ready in the 1950s and 1960s for the beats."
Most writers in the second wave have shunned mass appeal and avoided academia. Many have day jobs, in areas ranging from chemistry to pizza delivery.
"What was happening in universities, what was going on in the culture at large, simply didn't interest the second wave," Bennett said. "So individual artists went off and did it themselves, entirely on their own, making what they couldn't find anywhere else."

John M. Bennett (2002)
One of the techniques of Burroughs, Brion Gysin, and their generation was that of cutup writing. Burroughs practiced that quite literally, using various procedures for recombining and editing texts (or tape recordings) that had been cut apart with scissors. This produced a literary style and diction that in this "second wave" has become something written directly, by-passing the use of scissors. Cut-ups, then, which appeared early in the 20th century as a game or technique of surrealist and dada artists, passed through Gysin and Burroughs and the concrete poets in the mid-century where it became a major technique, and by the century's end had become a "natural" way of writing, had become the diction and voice of poets like F. A. Nettelbeck, Sheila E. Murphy, John M. Bennett, Jim Leftwich, Thomas L. Taylor, Carlos M. Luis, and many others.

Actual cutups are still done, along with other kinds of chance operations, but it is often now a procedure used in visual poetry, so that one can actually see the cutting that has occurred, as if it had a kind of ritual value.
